

Thomas Hutchings is a professional saxophonist and music producer living in New York City. Before starting Artists Without Labels, he worked in the technology industry for 16 years at a technology startup, collaborating on development of everything from logistics and business processes to inventory, database software design & CRM tools. While balancing a music & technology career, Thomas noticed that many of the business concepts and tools could be applied to the music industry in a positive way.

Thomas Hutchings is a popular New York City saxophonist, producer and podcast host. He's consistently crossed thresholds of greatness.

With a wide range of musical influences from Bunky Green and Grover Washington, Jr. to The Beastie Boys and Basement Jaxx, his music productions and arrangements have appeared in episodes of Keep Up With the Kardashians, Bad Girls, and Real World: Las Vegas.

As a regular fixture in New York's creative independent music and art scenes since 1995, Thomas has appeared in film and television and has performed and recorded for audiences big and small all over the world.
